"Children have access to the Internet at very young ages. Internet safety skills need to be taught early and the Faux Paw materials are powerful tools that help staff and parents to engage students in these concepts. We have found that our families which have limited English proficiency or limited computer skills are also benefiting from the program."

“iKeepSafe has done a remarkable job of utilizing nationally recognized leaders to research, write, edit, and organize the Faux Paw into an integrated package that is easy to use and promote. All materials communicate in a fun, non-threatening way the guidelines that will keep families safe online. Our volunteers have confidence that in choosing this presentation, they are offering parents and youth a truly valuable program. We are pleased at this deepening association and hope to carry the important message of Internet safety to all students across the state of Maryland.”

Deborah Nagel

“In recent years, Internet safety has become a complex problem for our society and for our children. It is essential that we find methods to effectively introduce children to these safety concerns in order to facilitate a dialogue with their parents. Concepts need to be clear and non-threatening, and presented in an entertaining and developmentally appropriate manner. In my professional opinion this story of a curious cat and a furious dog meets all of these criteria and will prove to be a valuable tool in promoting Internet safety for children.”

“Keeping children safe, therefore, becomes the parent’s responsibility...Faux Paw’s message to children acknowledges a child’s understandable vulnerability while emphasizing an awareness of Internet danger. Awareness gained by a child and vigilance maintained by parents may, hopefully, prevent tragedy in the future.”

“Faux Paw is a protection message to help your child be safe on the Internet. This clever cartoon will impress children that chat rooms are not warm, fuzzy cat rooms.”
